Dear Members of the School Board,

On behalf of the Berkeley Youth Commission, we write to urge the district to address significant gaps and concerns identified by students regarding the teaching of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in Berkeley schools.

From December 8th to January 12th, the Youth Commission conducted a survey that received 163 responses from students across Berkeley Unified School District ("BUSD"). Respondents represented a wide range of grade levels, with the largest groups consisting of 11th grade students (66 responses) and 8th grade students (37 responses), demonstrating that these concerns span both middle and high school populations.

When asked how much they have learned about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in school, 70% of students reported low exposure, selecting a 1 or 2 on a 5-point scale (114 students total). In contrast, students reported learning significantly more about the conflict through social media, with over 61% selecting a 4 or 5 on the same scale (100 students). This disparity is concerning, as it suggests that many students are forming their understanding of a complex and sensitive conflict primarily through unregulated and potentially misleading online sources rather than structured, educational settings.

An overwhelming majority of students, 92.6% (151 respondents) expressed a desire to learn more about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in school, specifically in ethnic studies or history classes. Students repeatedly emphasized that schools should be a place for factual, contextualized learning that reduces misinformation rather than allowing social media to fill the gap.

At the same time, student responses clearly show that how this topic is taught matters deeply. Concerns raised by students who were hesitant or opposed to learning more in school included fears of bias, unproductive or hostile classroom discussions, emotional distress, and the difficulty of teaching an ongoing conflict. Some students expressed concern about antisemitism, while others emphasized the need for Palestinian voices to be included without being dismissed or labeled as anti-semitic. These responses highlight the polarization students are already experiencing and the urgent need for careful, balanced, and respectful instruction on the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict.

When asked what would make them feel comfortable learning about this topic, students consistently called for neutrality, factual accuracy, and clear boundaries. Common themes included:

- Clear distinctions between governments, armed groups, and civilians;
- Assurance that Palestinian, Jewish, Muslim, Israeli, Arab, and other students would not be targeted or blamed;
- Structured discussions grounded in historical facts before debate;
- A safe, judgment-free environment with clear guidelines for dialogue; and
- Provide teachers with adequate support and protection when teaching the material.

Students repeatedly expressed that they want schools to be places where difficult topics can be discussed thoughtfully, without fear, harassment, or oversimplification. Many emphasized that avoiding the topic altogether only increases misinformation, polarization, and harm.

In light of this data, we urge the School Board to prioritize education on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in our schools.

We hope to continue this conversation and that student voices will be heard in the implementation process. Students are asking for this education. Education that is accurate, and taught by our trained educators. Addressing this need is essential to fostering critical thinking, empathy, and respectful discourse within our school community. We have many ideas for how this may be approached and want to continue to serve as the voice of Berkeley students to ensure action is take

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Very sincerely,
The Berkeley Youth Commission
